PCI Group Hires New Senior VP of Payment Processing George Schuh, Enters Payment Processing Market

PCI Group (www.pcigroup.com, Fort Mill, SC), one of the nation's leading document delivery and rapid outbound mail service providers, announced today the appointment of George Schuh as the company's new SVP of Payment Processing and Strategic Partnerships.

"We are very happy to welcome George Schuh to our executive team," said Christian Kropac, President of PCI Group. "George's talent and vast experience give PCI Group the opportunity for progression in a familiar, but unpenetrated, market."

The new position was created as part of the company's growth and expanded strategic direction to offer its customers the complete transactional document package. With fully variable document creation and mailing in place, remit payment processing was the next logical step.

PCI Group has dedicated substantial resources and technologies to the development of the new Payment Processing division, PCI Payments, which will include Lockbox Processing, Debit and Credit Card Processing, and Image-Based Processing. George will be responsible for overseeing the division's implementation and execution, as well as strengthening relationships with vendors and interested parties outside the company.

"This is a great direction for PCI Group," stated Schuh. "I am continually impressed with the company's adaptation, innovation, people, and commitment to its customers. I look forward to helping the business grow further."

A career veteran in the high transaction volume payments arena, Schuh has held a series of senior management positions spanning accountability for business development, operations, technology, and customer support roles. He was most recently a management consultant in the payments space, having been retained by a leading New York based remittance processing and financial transaction settlement organization to manage all aspects of on boarding a $63 billion bank's Retail Lockbox Portfolio.
